On September 21, an emergency regulation was filed by the Department of Health and Social Services (DHSS) to make changes to Title 26, Title 28, and Title 43 of the Alaska Administrative Code. The emergency regulations make a number of changes that would help DHSS more effectively respond to COVID-19. The changes include modifications to public health orders and regulations, as well as a change to the confidentiality regulations.

On September 21, the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) submitted a memo to the Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA). The memo provides an overview of the regulatory transfer of interest and release of guaranty from BP to Hilcorp's midstream entity Harvest Alaska, LLC. The transfer is not complete until the RCA exercises its authority to approve the aspects of the transfer subject to its jurisdiction.

On September 21, Commissioner Ledbetter announced that $62 million in additional unemployment payments would be distributed to eligible Alaskans. Payments will be made to regularly eligible individuals once programming is completed. Payments will be made to regularly eligible individuals once programming is completed. The Department expects that we will not run out of funds, but it could put the state in a fold problem, however. First, it's "fake" income increase because of all the government aid distribution (government support checks to individuals, unemployment insurance, COVID relief funds to states).

Interesting data showed that state government money being printed. But we all agree that the aid was needed. The problem is that it's not earned income. This delivers a fold problem, however. First, it's "fake" income increase because of all the government aid distribution (government support checks to individuals, unemployment insurance, COVID relief funds to states).

We developed our massive oil resources and then...we put a tax on it. Why? Why on earth would we do that? We have local farmers prospering. The Alaska Fair Share Act allows the state to get its fair share of the oil wealth in the future.

Kind regards,

There's lots of information in this week's newsletter. We've included the latest report from the Department of Labor and Workforce Development regarding the Fair Share Act. I'm including the latest report from the Department of Labor and Workforce Development.
